

The Ted Bradshaw Engaged Student Scholars Program provides meaningful experience for undergraduate and graduate students by connecting them with opportunities where they can use research and data to address real-world problems. Participants have the opportunity to work one-on-one with faculty, researchers, and community partners on the social justice and environmental issues they are passionate about.

The program is led by the Center for Regional Change, which is housed within and receives support from the UC Davis College of Agricultural and Environmental Sciences. The Ted Bradshaw Engaged Student Scholars Program is made possible through generous support from Ravi Khaira and Kamaljeet Singh-Khaira. Additional support has been provided by Dave Campbell, Carolyn Penny, and several other donors associated with UC Davis' annual Give Day. Leadership is provided by Bradshaw Scholars Coordinator Stephanie Zarate, Faculty Director Jonathan London, Associate Director Bernadette Austin, and Administrative Manager Araceli Moreno.

Special thanks to our donors!

2019 STUDENT RESEARCH

Cooperative Enterprises and Economic Development

These student scholars worked with Dr. Keith Taylor, Assistant Economic Development Specialist in Cooperative Extension at UC Davis. Jamila Alani, Clare Mosko, Mikaela Fenton and Alex Volzer examined limited equity housing cooperatives, renewable energy cooperatives, and other alternative economic development models that effectively meet the needs of communities.

JAMILA ALANI

CLARE MOSKO

MIKAELA FENTON

ALEX VOLZER

2019 STUDENT RESEARCH

Police Accountability

Partnering with a UC Davis PhD candidate, Andrew Isaac explored regionally-based copwatch programs to understand their organizational structure, challenges, and effectiveness in local communities.

ANDREW ISAAC

UC Davis Campus Transit

In collaboration with the UC Davis Institute of Transportation Studies, Ashton Sein examined modes of transportation for the campus population with a goal of identifying community needs and identifying new trends.

ASHTON SEIN

Climate Change

Joining community leaders and young people in Sacramento and West Sacramento, Megan Powers had the opportunity to prepare for a Youth Climate Summit to inform the Mayors' Commission on Climate Change.

MEGAN POWERS

Strategic Communications

In support of the Center for Regional Change, Cecilia Morales conducted interviews with CRC staff and partners to accurately capture and strategically communicate the CRC's message to a broader audience.

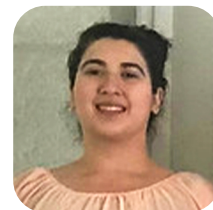

CECILIA MORALES

UC Davis Aggie Square

Working in partnership with Councilmember Jay Schenirer's Office, Larissa Saco and Karina Navarro gathered information about the community's needs and priorities through a combination of public convenings, interviews, and a survey to better inform decision-making related to Aggie Square.

LARISSA SACO

KARINA NAVARRO

